The Philippines strengthens its regional presence in the technology space as the Digital Pilipinas Festival (DPF) takes place on October 17-21, kicking off a month-long celebration of digital adoption in the ASEAN region with the hope of building anti-fragile system. It also supports the growth of the country's digital economy which is projected to to reach P5 trillion by 2030.

Throughout the week, the DPF will also bring together more than 200 prominent ASEAN leaders from the public and private sectors including regulators, CEOs, CTOs, CIOs, venture capitalists, investors, tech and digital innovators, pioneering startup founders, entrepreneurs, and senior policymakers.

The DPF will kick-off the month-long ASEAN FinTech Festival and will be followed by similar festivals in Cambodia, Thailand, the annual Singapore FinTech Festival, and Indonesia.

The DPF is composed of two parts: the World FinTech Festival-Philippines (WFF-PH) in the morning which will highlight the development and advancement of FinTech and various kinds of tech in the ASEAN region; and the inaugural Philippine FinTech Festival (PFF) in the afternoon which will focus on the challenges, issues, and innovations that are country-specific for the Philippines.

"DPF envisions making the Philippines a powerful player in the ASEAN region," says Amor Maclang, Convenor of Digital Pilipinas, the World FinTech Festival-Philippines (WFF-PH), and the PFF. "The Philippine digital economy, which economists have forecasted to reach a value of $92 billion by 2030, is poised to make our country even more competitive in the regional FinTech and other tech space."

"Together, Digital Pilipinas and the PFF compose the country's largest Digital Economies Festival," Maclang adds.

The World FinTech Festival-Philippines sessions (WFF-PH) in the morning will highlight the advancement of various kinds of tech in the ASEAN region. Government and industry leaders from various countries such as Hungary, Israel, and Singapore will be flying in to share their best practices and seek collaboration on trends like regional transactions, the spread of eCommerce, cybersecurity, and AI and data privacy, among others.

Meanwhile, the PFF's afternoon workshops will gather sectoral stakeholders, regulators, legacy players, technologists, and startups in individual technical working group discussions to address specific industry pain points—and then present their own unique solutions. The PFF will also explore how technology can tap the tremendous potentials that lie in the Philippines to improve industries, develop smart cities, and create a brighter future.

The WFF-PH and the PFF are convened by Digital Pilipinas, the largest private-sector movement for creating a technology and innovation system geared to tech-ing up the country, in partnership with Elevandi, an organization founded by the Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS) to foster an open dialogue between the public and private sector to advance FinTech in the digital economy.

The WFF-PH and PFF are also supported by the governments and fintech associations of Israel, Hungary, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, and Cambodia.

A major highlight during the 5-day series is the launch of the MAS Hackcelerator Program, powered by Digital Pilipinas and think tank Oliver Wyman, which will recognize ground-breaking innovations that advance society towards Web 3.0. Trade associations such as the Decentralized Ledger Technology Associations of the Philippines (DLTAP), InsurTech and RegTech associations, and other relevant industry groups will also be launched

All the events will showcase the unique nation-building capabilities and strengths of various kinds of emerging, innovative technology: Tech for Government, Mobility and Logistics, Smart and Connected Cities, Energy, Web 3.0 (Blockchain, Cryptocurrency, Cybersecurity, NFT), Open Data & Open Finance, E-wallets, SupTech, AI and Big Data, SME Digitalization and E-Commerce, WealthTech, FinTech, ESG and Green Finance, InsureTech and HealthTech, and MarkTech.

'Humanizing insurance for Filipinos'

By Maan D'Asis Pamaran
October 7, 2022

RICO BAUTISTA Etiqa Philippines President and CEO

"We believe in our philosophy of humanizing insurance or insurance looking into the human side of what we do and offer."

The pandemic has made Filipinos more aware about protecting their future, particularly in making sure they are covered for their health care needs. Etiqa Philippines, which has been in the country for over 40 years as one of the leading group health providers for multinational and local corporations, has expanded its reach to individual consumers through online channels and its partnership with Maybank Philippines.

At the helm of this mission to offer more Filipinos prompt and reliable health care services in over 1,600 accredited hospitals and clinics nationwide with 30,000 doctors, and a 24/7 in-house call center is its President and Chief Executive Officer Rico Bautista.

Bautista is no stranger to the insurance industry, with it being a "family business" or as he puts it: "My family was bred, fed and educated by the pre-need and the life insurance industries. My father started as a life insurance agent during his college days. His life transformed into a rags-to-riches story because of selling pre-need and life insurance products."

The elder Bautista worked as a house helper with his mother in one of his town's wealthiest clans. After graduating from college, he became a mailman and married another government employee. "Imagine raising seven children from the province, but eventually, he was able to send everyone to prestigious schools and universities, the majority of them in Metro Manila. All of his children now are very much settled with their own individual families and pursuing their successes," he added with pride.

Footsteps and digital footprints

He followed in his father's footsteps after obtaining his Bachelor of Arts in Philosophy degree from the University of Santo Tomas. "A few years after university graduation, without my father's knowledge, I applied to the president of the company where he was an agency manager with his own sales force. I got accepted and became a regional sales manager of the area where my father was operating. So, the set-up was that my father was "reporting" to me, and I was "handling" him with all of his sales force."

The arrangement would lead to his father being the company's number one agency manager for five consecutive years. He stayed in that company for more than 11 years and became the national sales head before moving on to other insurance companies.

His vision for Etiqa is influenced by his years of experience in the industry. "My vision for Etiqa is to be the leading Asean (Association of Southeast Asian Nations) insurer in the Philippines! Our roots are Asean; therefore, we want to be strong in our lines of business, both in the life and nonlife operations. More practically, we want to be part of the Top 10 players both in the life and nonlife industries in the Philippines."

Etiqa Philippines is one of the very few companies with a composite license in the country, meaning the company can sell both life and nonlife products. Rico builds on this difference by launching their Go Unified campaign. "With this, one can get life, health and nonlife products under one company, one roof and one brand. Our clients can get all their insurance needs from one company without having to deal with different brokers, agents, banks, partners and many insurance companies. Our distributors do not have to carry several different insurance companies. They only need to deal with Etiqa Philippines, and we will be able to make available for them almost all of the insurance products present in the market."

He also describes Etiqa as an "insuretech company." "We might not be entirely digital in all of our operations, but we have set the footprints for Etiqa Philippines to be at the forefront of what technology has to offer. We are embarking on our digital journey aggressively."

Passion and productivity

Rico believes that proper planning and passion in action is the key to good execution "When I see something good, I pursue it, and I pursue it passionately. This has been my driving principle in my career. At the same time, I plan for where I will bring the organization, organize the teams around it and work together to achieve the vision.
Another essential element is that I tend to favor action more than a very detailed plan of doing things. Plans are necessary, but doing the right action is more crucial in accomplishing the tasks at hand."

Though busy with work, he nurtures the other areas of his life. He enjoys time away from the office with his wife and their four daughters, with activities such as playing sports, eating together at home or at restaurants and going on road trips. "When my wife and I got married, we decided not to have a TV at home. Because of this, we can spend time on board games, reading or just telling stories, even up to the wee hours of the morning. We have traditions like prayers together and celebrating the Lord's Day every Saturday evening. We love being together."

He makes sure to look after his family life, health, social life, spiritual life and even his mental state. "Prioritization is key, including time management. I read the book Atomic Habits, which reinforces what I do to make my day productive and points into the areas I need to improve. All the aspects of my life are being considered every time and not just one area the entire time."

One of the keys to his longevity in the industry is that he is definitely pleased with his work. "Happiness at work can be described in several ways. One is finding satisfaction in what you do. If you find value in what you are doing, then you find purpose, and it gives you happiness. If you believe you are doing something greater than yourself, you tend to be satisfied and therefore find joy at work. If you find your sense of meaning in what you are doing, you will indeed find happiness."

He is further motivated by the fruits of his labor. "It gives you the sense that you are doing things right in the job assigned to you. It is your sense of accomplishment. When you can help others in your work, you become happy. It is a human tendency that you become happy in life when you are able to help others. Therefore, it is essential that you help other people in your company and not just necessarily from your department. This is your sense of community." He added that mistakes are a part of life, and that they help you grow. "Accepting your limitations and mistakes in life gives you that sense of self-awareness. In the end, it is about your mindset of finding your sense of purpose, having a sense of meaning, achieving a sense of accomplishment."

With the fulfillment he gets from his job that adds value to others, Bautista said he wants to retire with Etiqa Philippines. "We are just starting with many important projects that will let us scale up. So, 10-15 more years of working with the company will allow me to finish the things we have embarked on. At the same time, the reason I want to stay in the insurance industry, aside from my family being benefited by such, is because it is an industry where our products give much value during the uncertain times of sickness, accidents, hospitalization, calamities and even deaths. We are there during the critical moments in the lives of people."

His passion and purpose combines well with the company philosophy. "We believe in our philosophy of humanizing insurance or insurance looking into the human side of what we do and offer. Moreover, we are living by our purpose of making the Philippines a better place. This is our drive and passion in everything that we do!"

October 2022, Asia Insurance Review
EGIC CEO interview with the Asia Insurance Review

Etiqa General Insurance Cambodia CEO Chanmakara Bun

The Cambodian insurance market is still in its infant stage of growth. Players are on a learning curve and picking up nuances about customer behaviour and their expectations as they grow as an industry.

Many of the companies are new and are still settling down and exploring the market to garner a good enough territory for themselves. Challenges are aplenty, however as the industry has begun on virtually a clean slate, opportunities too are immense. If we can balance the expectations the entire ecosystem with the existing realities of the evolving environment, sky would be the limit for our industry.

Diversity and inclusivity essential

Diversity and inclusivity should be the focal point in an evolving market like Cambodia. Diversity here also refers to multi-domain knowledge and skillset whereby capable teams with diverse talents and diverse members can take up the appropriate roles.

We are operating in a digital era. The era of pure insurance operations will continue to exist but will be more of a core operation. To succeed, the entire operations would need tech-savvy, innovative and self-starting managers, and workforce.

InsurTechs have already helped the industry to automate several areas of operation including distribution and sales. The insurers now only need to catalyse this trend further and ensure building up suitable manpower in these and related domains.

Simple and affordable products

Insurance companies will have to look at product development suited to the specific needs of the market. One-size-fits-all strategy will not work anymore. A society like Cambodia requires more bite-sized, simple, easy to comprehend and affordable products.

Customer centricity and strategy to create a 'wow moment' for customers to have a lifetime pleasant memory after experiencing the insurers' services should be the target.

The market is already crowded and will get further crowded, hence, to be able to stand-out and be successful in this market, digitalisation would have to be way ahead. Insurance companies should be able to create a perfect data collection, collation and analysis system that can help it to plan for the times ahead.

Leverage technology and social media

We should emphasise social media and the need to become more digitally savvy. The industry should leverage the use of technology and social media – Facebook, LinkedIn, Twitter – to engage with the young and raise awareness of the industry and what it can offer.

Organisations need to create a brand about their culture and vision on various platforms to bring across insurance as a lucrative and attractive industry and profession.

What motivates the young today is an opportunity to learn and contribute. They want engagement and collaboration.

Project the right image

As CEOs we need to understand what appeals to people about insurance. Many, especially in the emerging markets, are not aware of the basic insurance role – that of a risk transfer instrument and hence the poor insurance penetration.

Insurance needs to be projected as a valuable risk transfer mechanism that helps people to rebuild their lives and economies to recover after catastrophic events.

Markets like Cambodia have many first-time insurance buyers. Hence, the sales and distribution model for them must one that is convenient, simple and easy to access. We must leverage technology to achieve this.
